Minimum Standard of Knowledge Requirements went into effect in January 2000. It requires certain food facilities to have an owner, manager, or employee who has passed a food safety certification exam. Food facilities handling or serving any type of unpackaged potentially hazardous foods are subject to this law. This includes restaurants, cafeterias, bars, bakeries, most markets, commissaries, mobile food preparation units (catering trucks) and stationary mobile food preparation units (fairs, carnival food trailers). This list is subject to change without notice.
