DPO Manzo reported that the 2017 Girls Advisory Council Conference had a total of 169 in attendance with 125 students. Ten high schools and two junior high schools sent students and two students attended from California State University – Stanislaus. Forty-four staff assisted with the conference and eleven agencies participated, including Center for Human Services, Stanislaus County Juvenile Probation, Haven House, Stanislaus County PAL, She Became, The Spot, Josie's Place, Project Yes, Aspiranet, and HARRT at Haven.

Division Director Dave Chapman reviewed that in 2016 the Girls Juvenile Justice Initiative Task Force proposed the idea to start a Girls Advisory County with partner agency participation to offer services to empower girls. The Young Women's Empowerment Conference in the Bay Area was used as a model for the development of the Girls Advisory Council. The first conference had more students, staff and agencies participating than anticipated. Schools bussed students to the conference. The next conference will offer break-out sessions and be prepared for more students to attend. Young men are invited to attend. The funding source is coming from the agencies involved. The Project Yes Campus is available and will be used for the next conference with timing structured to have more students able to attend. A Girls Advisory Council logo has been designed by a student. The age of participants is mostly junior high and high school students, ages 12 years and up. General population students are targeted and do not have to be involved in the juvenile justice system.
